All the negative aspects should be deleted within the first three minutes. If not taken out, they would become stronger later and you can never those

1. Hand sanitizers are everywhere. They are cheap effective disinfectants and many are easy to carry around. But lately these products have been scrutinized for the potential harm they can have on children. - Many caregivers are unaware of the very high alcohol content present in alcohol-based hand sanitizers, which can contain up to 60% to 95% alcohol said Cynthia Santos, MD from CDC, National Centre for Environment Health. Young children may in advertently consume these sanitizers, because of their appearing scents like apple, vanilla and citrus. Number of cases reported to NDPS about exposure to alcohol hand sanitizer in children are as follows:

YEAR	ALCOHOL	NON-ALCOHOL	TOTAL
TOTAL	65,293(92.4%)	5376 (7.6 %)	70,669
2011	15,971 (92.5%)	1286 (7.5%)	17,257
2012	16,571 (92.4%)	1355 (7.6%)	17,296
2013	16,423 (92.5%)	1338 (7.5%)	17,761
2014	16,328 (92.1%)	1397 (7.9%)	17,725

- 2. In a new report from CDC researchers analyzed data reported to the National Poison Data System (NPDS) from 2011-14 on exposures to alcohol and non-alcohol-based hand sanitizers in children were 12 years old or younger. A total of 70,669 hand sanitizer exposures in this age group were reported to NPDS, including 65,293 (92.4%) alcoholbased exposures and 5,376 (7.6%) nonalcohol-based exposures. Adverse health effects were more likely to be reported for alcohol-based hand sanitizer exposures, and they tended to be worse than those for non-alcohol-based hand sanitizer exposures. Younger kids are more susceptible to adverse effects [from these products] because there is not as much glycogen in their liver, said Greene Shepherd, clinical professor at the University Of North Carolina Eshelman School of Pharmacy.
- 3. The most common type of adverse health effects for both alcohol- and non-alcoholbased hand sanitizers were ocular irritation, vomiting, conjunctivitis, oral irritation. cough, and abdominal pain. Rare effects included coma, seizure, hypoglycemia. metabolic acidosis, and respiratory depression. The researchers stratified the NPDS data Page 3 of 1 into two age groups: 0 to 5 years and 6 to 12 years. They looked only at exposures to ethanol-based sanitizers, isopropanol-based sanitizers, and non-alcohol based sanitizers—no NPDS reported calls about co-exposures to other agents were included in the analysis. Most exposures—91%— occurred in children aged 5 years or younger. Children aged 6 to 12 years had more intentional exposures, a finding the report authors said could indicate that these products are being abused among older children. Shepherd said that abuse of alcohol-based hand sanitizers can be equivalent to consuming roughly 120-proof liquor.

4. Patients, parents, and caregivers should be informed about the potential dangers associated with alcohol-based hand sanitizers. The report stated that alcohol-based hand sanitizers should be used under adult supervision with proper child safety precautions and stored out of reach of young children to reduce unintended, adverse consequences. Washing hands with soap and water when available, is currently the recommended method of hand hygiene in non-health-care settings. If soap and water are not available, use of a hand sanitizer that contains at least 60% alcohol is recommended, or a non-alcohol-based hand sanitizer or wipe can be used.
